In 11 female patients with juvenile obesity, aged 15-21, with a body mass index (BMI) greater than 30 and a mean weight gain of 36 kg in the previous 10 months, no difference in the plasma concentrations of alpha-melanocyte-stimulating hormone (alpha-MSH) and ACTH was found compared with 19 female controls matched for age, gender and BMI, but without a significant weight gain in the previous 10 months. Also, the concentrations of alpha-MSH and ACTH in the medullar cerebellum and corpus striatum in 11 patients and 15 controls were not different. These data suggest that the increased body weight in juvenile obesity is not a consequence of an increased release of alpha-MSH from the melanocytes.
